NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

In this arrangement of Cool Joe, Mean Joe, better known as Killer Joe, each section functions as one unified group in counterpoint to the others.

The rhythm section enters first with an ostinato bass line. The saxophones follow with a laid-back, swing line. Finally, the brass enters with the sparse melody. I highly recommend the use of mutes to add to the understated “cool” color of this chart.

I suggest rehearsing each instrumental section separately until they are confident with their independent line. An excellent rehearsal technique is to sing the lines until the players are phrasing as one in their entrances, breathing, rhythms, and swing feel. Often, young players become focused on the mechanics of their instruments while playing, thereby shutting down their ears. Singing the lines helps them connect to the music without the physical distractions. Once a section can sing the line as an independent group, add another group singing their contrasting line. After every section is swinging and singing together, add the horns.

I highly recommend the director and the students listen to the original 1960 recording of Killer Joe. Titled Meet the Jazztet, the recording features trumpeter Art Farmer and tenor saxophonist Benny Golson, and is a must-have classic recording. The written solos are based on fragments from Farmer’s and Golson’s improvised solos. This was done with the intent to introduce young players to some improvisational vocabulary from these masters. In teaching improvisation, it may be helpful to analyze these solos with all the students—not just the soloists—to point out rhythmic motifs, variations in length of phrases and rhythmic entrances (not always entering on the down beat), note choices, and development of melodic motifs.

Enjoy!
