TO THE DIRECTOR

The key to performing "Bistro Latino" is to avoid the tendency to get too fancy with the rhythm section parts. In any type of Afro-Cuban music, the key is to have a lot of players doing very simple things that "puzzle together" into a rhythm that is easy to follow whether listening or dancing. It is recommended that the rhythm section players listen to some other Latin music to internalize the various styles. Feel free to add other auxiliary percussionists, but make sure they play simple figures! Timbales, congas, bongos, cowbell, and guira are likely choices. The piano, guitar and bass parts are primarily notated to ensure authenticity, but those well-versed in this style of music may want to comp where chord symbols are provided.

As for the horn sections, their parts should be played with emphasized articulations and lots of spirit! During unisons, resist the temptation to play loudly, instead, play in a precise and controlled manner. Watch the interlude section, where the rhythm section plays a light, floating feel. It will sound like the piece is going through several time signature changes, but it actually stays in 4/4. My advice would be to make sure the entrances and releases are accurate and let the rhythm section maintain the steadiness of the time feel during these sections.

Have lots of fun with this piece. Your audiences certainly will!
