NOTES TO THE CONDUCTOR

Latin charts are all about rhythm, the groove and syncopation, and this chart has plenty of both. The good news is that once a comfortable “2” feel has been established and the groove can work on its own, the ensemble figures are much more comfortable to play and make more musical sense. I suggest to first work with just the rhythm section and to get a secure, stable Latin feel locked in. Once the foundation has been set and can be relied upon, begin adding the layers of horns.

Another advantage of this chart is the opportunity to include numerous auxiliary percussionists. However, they must be able to play in time and not just make noise. Anything not working with the groove is working against it, thereby making it more difficult for the horn players to be comfortable with their parts and timing. It’s better to have no auxiliary percussion than to have disruptive percussion. And of course, taste, balance, and blend are critical for percussion instruments.

In Gordon Goodwin’s original arrangement of this tune, he relies on several contrapuntal layers that move to the forefront and back again. Some are melodic and others are comments on the melody or little fills. Be careful to identify which is which, and balance them accordingly. I have tried to maintain as much of this quality throughout my adaptation; however, I have reassigned some of the parts due to range and section security issues. Still, each horn player must be aware of how their part fits into the whole as well as who else in the ensemble is playing their part, so they can listen and match pitch and style.

Speaking of style, articulation is very important. Pay close attention to the various accents and note lengths presented throughout the piece. The marcato “housetops” are to be played with power (accented), but for only about half the length value. Not too short, but with some heft to them. A good example of this is the opening melody statement at m. 15. The articulations really define the intent there and throughout that phrase.

Accurate articulation is also paramount to the success of the layered sections, as in the intro and m. 95. Without clarity of articulation and note lengths to include releases, these sections of the chart will lose impact. Make sure each section is playing cleanly and together!

For the rhythm section parts, the piano, bass, and drums are well-notated. The guitar part indicates some written note lines with other instruments. The guitarist should listen and blend in unison with the other instruments. Other notation for guitar is referred to as slash notation. This indicates the chord to be played along with the rhythm pattern. Blend is always critical, so the guitarist should definitely listen, blend, and, in general, strive to be dynamically understated.

The overall key to success with this chart is to relax, let the groove happen, and have the horns play or float on top of the rhythm section foundation. As I said at the top, it’s all about the groove and the syncopation.

Enjoy the ride!
