About the Music

This work is probably the best known of the overtures written by Johannes Brahms. It is a compendium of familiar college songs from his day, woven together with short bridge sections and eventually ushered forth in full orchestral voice. The four songs are We Have Built a Stately House, which was majestically stated by the brass section in the original; The Landfather, put forth by the strings; What Comes from Afar, sung by the woodwinds; and finally the triumphant Wherefore Let Us Rejoice, powerfully rendered by full orchestra amidst active string lines. Careful attention has been given to both dynamic and stylistic indications, which should be the central focus for all members of the ensemble.

As a string arrangement, the work offers exciting opportunities for mature high school players. All of the primary lines are intact, just as written by Brahms. A combination of juxtaposed and interlocking double-stops are used to maintain the sonorous depth of Brahms's original work; divisi are used only as necessary.

Brahms's Academic Festival Overture, Opus 80 was first performed in January of 1881 at the University of Breslau, with the composer conducting in honor of his receiving an honorary doctorate from the institution two years previous.
