About the Music

Franz Schubert completed the writing of his Symphony No. 5 at age 19; the year was 1816 and he had had two 'prodigious' years of composing leading to its composition. In this particular year, he had slowed his compositional pace, completing 'only' 100+ songs for solo voice, three sonatas for violin and piano, a mass, most of an opera, symphonies 4 & 5, and several other smaller works.

The complete symphony is a treasure from start to finish, and continues to be one of his most popular instrumental works. While Schubert was still 'young' as a composer when he wrote it, his 5th symphony demonstrates notable advancement in style and originality. It is clear, however, that he was well familiar with Mozart's Symphony No. 40 in G Minor. That is particularly true with regard to the third movement, Menuetto.

Arranged by Robert McCashin, the movement is labeled a minuet, but it is highly energetic, as much a 'scherzo' as anything. It is originally scored for 1 flute, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns and strings. This Menuetto is chocked full of great tunes and light-hearted rhythms, and would be a great addition to any concert!
